THURSDAY LVENING, AUGUST 7.

Harrison in a Horse Trade. James H. Rice, ex-chairman of the Indiana democratic State central committee, was at the Palmer House, Chicago, on Tuesday and told a new story on President Harrison in substance as follows:

Colonel Bridgeland was one of the most enthusiastic republicans in Indiana and shouted as loudly for General Harrision as shouted as journy for General Harriston as the next man during the campaign of 1888. He had a big pocket book and opened it for campaign purposes whenever occasion re-quired. His fad was horses of the finest breed and he had some of the best in the country. He had an itching for office as well, and expected something when General Harrison went to the White House. One afternoon just after the election, he took General Harrison out driving behind a thor-oughbred worth not less than $2 500, and the General was greatly pleased.

"I thought you'd like him, Mr. President," said the Colonel, "and it was for that reason I took you out. Now, if you will accept him, I shall be pleased to make you a present of him."

But General Harrison wouldn't listen to thie and so Colonel Bridgeland offered to sell the horse to the President slect for $150 if he should prove satisfactory on triat. General Harrison, knowing a bargain when he saw one, purchased the horse for $150 after he had tried him. For some reason of other, however, Colonel Bridgeland didn't get the expected office, and when he died, not long ago, he was a most cordial hater of the President.

Some people thought the reason the Col one didn't get the coveted office was be-cause he told about the horse affair and the President heard of it. The horse is at the present time, according to Mr. Rice, quartered in the Presidential stable, and the occupant of the White House would not take many times $150 for him.
